QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW:

I. Whether the Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v. Johnson, holding any court of general jurisdiction has jurisdiction over parties who sue in divorce even if no marriage existed, violates federal law when this Court has announced federal courts lack jurisdiction over divorce cases?

II. Whether the Utah Supreme Court's decision violates the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution and the Defense of Marriage Act when the Utah Supreme Court found the district court has jurisdiction to grant a divorce in the case of an illegal marriage?

A. The Johnson decision improperly extends the scope of divorce and contravenes public policy because it no longer makes "marriage" a requirement to obtain a divorce 17

B. The Johnson decision contravenes the Defense of Marriage Act and Article IV of the U.S. Constitution because it requires other states to give full faith and credit to Utah divorce decrees that violate their own laws 19

V. By focusing on subject matter jurisdiction, an issue that neither party briefed, the Utah Supreme Court failed to foresee the problematic repercussions implicit in its holding 21

A. The Johnson Decision Removes the Need for a Common Law Marriage Statute, and Ignores the Lawmaking Authority of the Utah State Legislature 21

CITATIONS OF THE OFFICIAL AND UNOFFICIAL REPORTS OF THE OPINIONS AND ORDERS ENTERED IN THIS CASE

The decision by the Utah Supreme Court of May 7, 2010, is reported as Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, 234 P.3d 1100, and is included as Appendix A hereto.

The order by the Utah State District Court for the Fourth District, Provo Department, of February 28, 2008, is unreported and is included as Appendix B hereto.

The order by the Utah Supreme Court of June 28, 2010, is unreported and is included as Appendix C hereto.

Neldon Johnson, Petitioner, for his petition for certiorari states:

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

(i) The date the judgment or order sought to be reviewed was entered.

The Utah Supreme Court issued a written opinion on May 7, 2010, under the citation Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, 234 P.3d 1100. A copy of the opinion is attached as Appendix A.

Neldon Johnson filed a Petition for Rehearing on May 21, 2010. The Utah Supreme Court denied the Petition for Rehearing on June 28, 2010 in a written order. A copy of the order is attached as Appendix C

(ii) Statutory provision allowing appeal.

28 U.S.C. § 1257(a) provides jurisdiction to appeal this matter to the United States Supreme Court.

APPLICABLE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS, TREATIES, STATUTES, ORDINANCES, AND REGULATIONS

28 U.S.C. § 1257(a) (2010).

(a) Final judgments or decree rendered by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had, may be reviewed by the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States is drawn in question or whether the validity of a statute of any State is drawn in question on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed under the Constitution or the treaties or statutes of, or any commission held or authority exercised under, the United States.

U.S. Constitution, Art. IV, § 1.

Full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. And the congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof.

28 U.S.C. § 1738C (2010).

No State, territory, or possession of the United States, or Indian tribe, shall be required to give effect to any public act, record, or judicial proceeding of any other State, territory, possession, or tribe respecting a relationship between persons of the same sex that is treated as a marriage under the laws of such other State, territory, possession, or tribe, or a right or claim arising from such relationship.

Utah Constitution, Art. I, § 29.

(1) Marriage consists only of the legal union between a man and a woman.

(2) No other domestic union, however denominated, may be recognized as a marriage or given the same or substantially equivalent legal effect.

Utah Code Ann. § 30-1-4.5 (2004).

(1) A marriage which is not solemnized according to this chapter shall be legal and valid if a court or administrative order establishes that it arises out of a contract between a man and a woman who:

(a) are of legal age and capable of giving consent;

(b) are legally capable of entering a solemnized marriage under the provisions of this chapter;

(c) have cohabited;

(d) mutually assume marital rights, duties, and obligations; and

(e) who hold themselves out as and have acquired a uniform and general reputation as husband and wife.

(2) The determination or establishment of a marriage under this section must occur during the relationship described in Subsection (1), or within one year following the termination of that relationship. Evidence of a marriage recognizable under this section may be manifested in any form, and may be proved under the same general rules of evidence as facts in other cases.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Neldon Johnson ("Mr. Johnson") asks this Court to reverse the Utah Supreme Court's decision, finding the Fourth District Court of Utah ("District Court") had jurisdiction to grant a divorce after making an express finding that there was no legal marriage. Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, ¶¶ 3, 4. Johnson involves a divorce between Appellant, Mr. Johnson, and Appellee, Ms. Johnson who were not legally married and whose marriage was illegal at the time because Ms. Johnson was underage. Despite an illegal union, the Utah Supreme Court found the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction to grant a divorce. Id., at ¶ 1.

The Utah Supreme Court affirmed denial of a Rule 60(b) Motion to Vacate the Divorce Decree filed by Mr. Johnson, in which he argued the District Court did not have subject matter jurisdiction to divorce an unmarried couple. Id. The District Court decided Mr. Johnson was estopped from challenging subject matter jurisdiction because of the timeliness of his Motion to Vacate. See Appendix B. On appeal, the Utah Supreme Court rejected estoppel and instead concluded the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction "because courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim." Id., at ¶ 12. This decision was unconstitutional and should be reversed.

I. Facts.

On or about May 3, 1964, Mr. and Ms. Johnson set out for Mexico to elope. On the day of the alleged marriage, Ms. Johnson was only 15 years old and could not legally marry in Utah. On the way to Mexico, Mr. Johnson's vehicle broke down near Hatch, Utah. The parties stayed in Hatch to await repairs. The parties never made it to Mexico nor did they ever marry. They agreed to return home and tell everyone they were married in Arizona. The parties were never married at any time. The parties never received a marriage license from any jurisdiction.

One year later, on or after May 3, 1965, Mr. and Ms. Johnson participated in a Mormon religious ceremony which presumed they were previously legally and lawfully married. No marriage license was procured for the ceremony and the "marriage" was not solemnized.

Over the ensuing years, on two different occasions, Mr. Johnson asked Ms. Johnson to legally marry him. Ms. Johnson refused on both occasions. On the first occasion, in or about the early 1990s, in Las Vegas, Nevada, Mr. Johnson asked Ms. Johnson to marry him. Ms. Johnson said she did not want to get married. On the second occasion, in or about the late 1990s, after Mr. and Ms. Johnson watched the movie Runaway Bride, Mr. Johnson again asked Ms. Johnson to marry him. Ms. Johnson again said she did not want to get married because she did not think the relationship would last much longer.

Mr. and Ms. Johnson pretended to live as husband and wife for approximately 35 years. On or about July 20, 2000, Ms. Johnson filed for divorce. In answering the petition for divorce, Mr. Johnson believed time alone established a common law marriage. Mr. Johnson did not think to plead the parties were never married or that Ms. Johnson was only 15 years old when they began cohabiting.

On or about May 29, 2001, Mr. and Ms. Johnson entered into a stipulation to bifurcate the divorce action. On or about June 6, 2001, the District Court entered the Decree of Divorce and Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law. On or about June 27, 2001, the Court entered the Amended Decree of Divorce. The Amended Decree of Divorce and Amended Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law incorporated a stipulation between the parties to the terms of the divorce.

On September 18, 2007, Mr. Johnson filed a Motion to Vacate the Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction Pursuant to Utah R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1), 12(h), and 60(b)(4). Mr. Johnson had recently learned the parties did not have a common law marriage because the "marriage" was never properly solemnized as required by Utah law and the marriage was void because Ms. Johnson was only 15 years old when the "marriage" was to have occurred.

Mr. Johnson argued the District Court did not have jurisdiction to enter a divorce because there was no marriage between the parties. The District Court denied Mr. Johnson's motion, finding Mr. Johnson was estopped from challenging subject matter jurisdiction because of the timeliness of his Motion to Vacate. Mr. Johnson appealed to the Utah Supreme Court.

The Utah Supreme Court heard oral argument on the matter. The Utah Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, ignoring estoppel and instead concluding the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction over the divorce "because courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim." Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶ 12. The Utah Supreme Court held because the District Court has jurisdiction over divorces, it has subject matter jurisdiction to determine the rights of parties who sue in divorce. Id. at ¶7.

ARGUMENT

The United States Supreme Court has jurisdiction under § 1257(a) to review "[f]inal judgments or decrees rendered by" the Utah Supreme Court. Johnson v. California, 541 U.S. 428, 429 (2004). This Court should grant certiorari to correct the Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v. Johnson, which held Utah courts of general jurisdiction have subject matter jurisdiction over divorce cases even if no legal marriage existed.

The Utah Supreme Court's decision violates the Utah Constitution, the full faith and credit clause of the United States Constitution, and the Defense of Marriage Act ("DOMA"). The Johnson decision removes the jurisdictional prerequisite of marriage from divorce cases, a prerequisite traditionally acknowledged in Utah and by almost all states. This decision seemingly grants subject matter jurisdiction to courts to hear divorce cases which, before Johnson, would have lacked subject matter jurisdiction, so long as other statutory jurisdiction requirements are met (i.e., Federal District Courts situated in Utah where diversity exists and amount in controversy is met may now hear and decide divorces).

The Johnson case emasculates strict legislative requirements for common law marriage by allowing a party who fails to qualify under statutory common law marriage guidelines to obtain a divorce nonetheless. This decision inadvertently provides justification to parties to ignore all statutory marriage requirements.

Finally, this decision allows a court to grant those who have any form of domestic partnership arrangement, whether legal or illegal, recognized or unrecognized, to obtain a divorce because marriage is no longer required in Utah for a divorce. Therefore, certiorari is appropriate.

I. The Utah Supreme Court's ruling is unconstitutional because it gives illegal marriages the same or substantially equivalent legal effect as legal marriages, a result contrary to Utah's Constitution.

Article I, Section 29 of the Utah Constitution states:

> (1) Marriage consists only of the legal union between a man and a woman.
> (2) No other domestic union, however denominated, may be recognized as a marriage or given the same or substantially equivalent legal effect.

Utah Const. Art. I, § 29 (2009) (emphasis added).

Under Utah's Constitution, the only marriage recognized is a "legal union between a man and a woman." Id. All parties in this matter, and the Utah Supreme Court, recognize there was no "legal union between a man and a woman" in this case. Johnson, at ¶¶ 3, 4. Nevertheless, the holding in Johnson in part states, "...[because] courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate divorces, we will not invalidate a divorce decree on the grounds that 'the right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted." Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶ 12.

This holding violates the Utah State Constitution by creating a mechanism whereby parties not lawfully married may enjoy the legal effects of a valid marriage by receiving a divorce decree from Utah courts. By holding the unmarried parties in Johnson were eligible for a divorce decree, the Utah Supreme Court has paved the way for others similarly situated to seek remedial relief previously reserved by Utah's Constitution only to lawfully married couples. Consequently, the Utah Supreme Court is now affording the same or substantially equivalent legal effect to a non-married couple by enforcing this unmarried couple's divorce decree, thereby contravening unambiguous constitutional provisions to the contrary.

The Utah Supreme Court's holding relies upon general jurisdiction to negate the special protections afforded to a marriage contract alone. See Utah Code Ann. § 30-3-1(2) (1997). A marriage contract can only exist where there has been a legal union between a man and a woman. See Utah Const., Art. I, § 29.

Without a legal union, the marriage contract would necessarily be void for illegality.

The District Court obtains subject matter jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage only where a legal union exists. To hold a District Court automatically has subject matter jurisdiction to grant divorces when parties are not legally married is to give courts automatic subject matter jurisdiction to grant a divorce under any circumstance.

The Utah Supreme Court's holding directly violates the Utah Constitution by now giving the District Courts subject matter jurisdiction to grant a divorce (and thereby legalize a marriage) whenever there is an illegal marriage applying for divorce in Utah. There is no difference between the illegal union in this case and the illegal unions between same sex couples, or other cases involving minors, or where there are multiple wives or husbands, or under any number of heretofore illegal domestic arrangements. There is no difference between an illegal marriage because the parties were ineligible to marry due to age (as here), or an illegal marriage because of other issues including all of the above. No marital defect now prevents divorce in Utah. The holding is in error by conferring marital rights upon illegal unions in violation of Utah's Constitution and should be reversed.

II. The Utah Supreme Court's decision eliminates the need for subject matter jurisdiction in order for a United States District Court in Utah to hear a case.

"Subject matter jurisdiction defines the court's authority to hear a given type of case." United States v. Morton, 467 U.S. 822, 828 (1984). "It represents 'the extent to which a court can rule on the conduct of persons or the status of things.'" Carlsbad Technology, Inc. v. HIF Bio, Inc., ___ U.S. ___, 129 S.Ct. 1862, *4 (2009) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 870 (8th ed. 2004)). However, "[t]his Court's precedent makes clear that whether a court has subject matter jurisdiction over a claim is distinct from whether a court chooses to exercise that jurisdiction." Id.

Utah law used to be in accord. See Chen v. Stewart, 2004 UT 82, ¶ 38, 100 P.3d 1177 (subject matter jurisdiction "is the authority of the court to decide the case"). However, under the Johnson decision, subject matter is no longer required for a US District Court to hear a case.

> In Johnson, the Utah Supreme Court stated:
> Just as a court adjudicating a contract dispute has the authority to determine that no contract exists without losing subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute, a court has the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim even if the court later determines that no marriage ever existed. We therefore overrule our holding in Caffall and hold that because courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate divorces, we will not invalidate a > divorce decree on the grounds that the 'right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted.'

Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶ 12 (citing Perry v. McLaughlin, 754 P.2d 679, 682 (Utah App. 1988)).

This decision permits any court, including a US District Court, to grant a divorce, even if there was no marriage. The Johnson decision is over-reaching. See Chen, 2004 UT at ¶ 38 (quoting Utah Code Ann. § 78-3-4 (2003)). Granting certiorari will allow this Court to clarify the misconceptions about subject matter jurisdiction in US District Courts of general jurisdiction.

III. Whether the Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson v. Johnson violates federal law when this Court has announced federal courts lack jurisdiction over divorce cases.

The domestic-relations exception to federal court jurisdiction is a judicially created exception to Congress' grant of diversity-based subject matter jurisdiction on the federal district courts. Martinez v. Martinez, No. CIV 09-0281, *9 (N.M. 3-30-2010). The Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that, in a highly circumscribed category of "domestic-relations" cases, federal district courts lack jurisdiction even when there is complete diversity between the parties. Id. It is known as the domestic-relations exception. See Ankenbrandt v. Richards, 504 U.S. 687 (1992)

The exception grew from dicta in the 1858 Supreme Court case of Barber v. Barber, 62 U.S. 582 (1858), where this Court stated:

> We disclaim altogether any jurisdiction in the courts of the United States upon the subject of divorce, or for the allowance of alimony, either as an original proceeding in chancery or as an incident to divorce a vinculo, or to one from bed and board.

62 U.S. at 584.

In Ankenbrandt v. Richards, 504 U.S. 687, this Court recognized that the statement in Barber, supra, "disclaiming jurisdiction over divorce and alimony decree suits, though technically dicta, formed the basis for excluding 'domestic relations' cases from the jurisdiction of the lower federal courts, a jurisdictional limitation those courts have recognized ever since." 504 U.S. at 694. This Court then concluded "the domestic relations exception, as articulated by this Court since Barber, divests the federal courts of power to issue divorce, alimony, and child custody decrees." Id., at 703.

The Tenth Circuit concisely phrased the various rationales for the rule:

> (1) the states have a strong interest in domestic relations matters and have developed an expertise in settling family disputes; (2) such disputes often require ongoing supervision, a task for which the federal courts are not suited; (3) federal adjudication of such disputes > increases the chances of incompatible or duplicative federal and state court decrees; and (4) such cases serve no particular federal interest, while they crowd the federal court docket.

Vaughan v. Smithson, 883 F.2d 63, 65 (10th Cir. 1989) (citing Rykers v. Alford, 832 F.2d 895, 899-900 (5th Cir. 1987), and Ruffalo v. Civiletti, 702 F.2d 710, 717 (8th Cir. 1983)).

In Elk Grove Unified Sch. Dist. v. Newdow, this Court stated: "So strong is our deference to state law in [the area of domestic relations] that we have recognized a 'domestic relations exception' that 'divests the federal courts of power to issue divorce, alimony, and child custody decrees,'" unless a rare instance arises in which it is "necessary to answer a substantial federal question that transcends or exists apart from the family law issue." 542 U.S. 1, 12-13 (2004) (internal citations omitted).

In discussing the breadth of the exception, the Supreme Court stated:

> In the more than 100 years since this Court laid the seeds for the development of the domestic relations exception, the lower federal courts have applied it in a variety of circumstances. Many of these applications go well beyond the circumscribed situations posed by Barber and its progeny.

Ankenbrandt, 504 U.S. at 701. However, this Court narrowed the exception in 2006, stating "the exception covers only 'a narrow range of domestic relations issues.'" Marshall v. Marshall, 547 U.S. 293, 307 (2006). "[O]nly 'divorce, alimony, and child custody decrees' remain outside federal jurisdictional bounds." Id. at 308.

The Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson contravenes the domestic-relations exception because the holding allows for any court of general jurisdiction, whether state or federal, to adjudicate divorce issues. Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶ 12. The holding makes no distinction between state and federal courts.

The holding leaves open to any court with jurisdiction over civil matters to grant divorces, including a U.S. District Court so long as the case involves diversity of citizenship and more than $75,000 in controversy. See 28 U.S.C. § 1332 (2010). Additionally, there is no reason why a state small claims court could not grant a divorce where the marital estate is less than jurisdictional limits of the small claims court. This holding directly conflicts with Ankenbrandt and its progeny. Therefore, a grant of certiorari is appropriate.

IV. The Johnson Decision improperly extends the scope of divorce and contravenes the Defense of Marriage Act and Article IV of the U.S. Constitution.

This Court has recognized that marriage is a "fundamental human relationship" Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371, 383 (1971) and "involves interests of basic importance in our society." Id. at 376. This Court continued: it is "unaware of any jurisdiction where private citizens may covenant for or dissolve marriages without state approval" because marriage is in the exclusive control of each state. Id. at 376.

Notwithstanding the prime importance of marriage in society, the Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson improperly extends the scope of divorce and contravenes the Defense of Marriage Act and the Fourteenth Amendment.

A. The Johnson decision improperly extends the scope of divorce and contravenes public policy because it no longer makes "marriage" a requirement to obtain a divorce.

The Utah Supreme Court's new rule that "[t]he district court has jurisdiction over divorces and thus has jurisdiction to determine the rights of parties who sue in divorce" violates public policy. Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28,¶¶ 7-13. A valid marriage has always been the prerequisite for jurisdiction in a divorce action in Utah. See, e.g., Barton v. Barton, 29 P.3d 13 (Utah App. 2001); Van Der Stappen v. Van Der Stappen, 815 P.2d 1335 (Utah App. 1991). The requirement of a valid marriage is a jurisdictional requirement in almost all states. See, e.g., Crane v. Taliaferro, 2009 Ark. App. 336, 308 S.W.3d 648; Stark v. Ratashara, 177 N.C. App. 449 (2006); Blocker v. Blocker, 885 So.2d 796 (Ala. Civ. App.2004); Cannon v. Cannon, 677 N.E.2d 566 (Ind. App. 1997); In Re Marriage of Brown, 878 S.W.2d 94 (Mo. App. E.D. 1994); Lowenschuss v. Lowenschuss, 579 A.2d 377 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1990).

The institution of marriage is at risk in Utah because its courts have said a legal marriage is irrelevant in deciding how to dissolve any cohabitation. In Utah, whether or not the parties seeking a divorce have a valid marriage, they may obtain a divorce from the District Court solely because of its powers of general jurisdiction to grant a divorce. This affects every state of the union.

The Johnson case will not be limited in affect to divorce proceedings, but will inevitably extend to health benefits, rights of survivorship, inheritance, etc. Federal funds and National programs will be directly affected by the economic results of this unanchored decision. The decision places no limits on who may sue for divorce or under what circumstances a divorce will be granted.

In Black's Law Dictionary 515 (8th ed. 2004), "divorce" is defined as "[t]he legal dissolution of a marriage by a court." However, the Utah Supreme Court's decision does not require parties to be married to grant a divorce. This decision extends the scope of divorce, allowing a party to sue for divorce in bigamous relationships, in a relationship with an underage party, in an unrecognized co-habitation relationship, or in a same-sex relationship, such as a domestic partnership or same-sex marriage, because "the district court has jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties who sue in divorce." Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶7. In none of these scenarios is there a valid marriage, yet the parties may now sue for divorce in Utah with the potential for mischief under other legal rights or programs.

The Utah Supreme Court has adopted a brave new approach of granting parties to invalid and illegal marriages the right to a divorce decree. Without the Utah Legislature's involvement in debating or controlling the process, and in derogation of the Legislative mandate limiting common law marriages, now in Utah a marriage is irrelevant to divorce. This is error. Therefore, a grant of certiorari is appropriate.

B. The Johnson decision contravenes the Defense of Marriage Act and Article IV of the U.S. Constitution because it requires other states to give full faith and credit to Utah divorce decrees that violate their own laws.

Article IV of the United States Constitution states "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State." U.S. Const., Art. IV, Sec. 1. However, Congress has adopted the Defense of Marriage Act, in which Congress determined that, though each state must recognize the proceedings of another state, "No State ... of the United States ... shall be required to give effect to any ... judicial proceeding of any other State ... respecting a relationship between persons of the same sex that is treated as a marriage under the law of such other State...." 28 U.S.C. § 1738C.

The breadth of the decision by the Utah Supreme Court now risks requiring other states to recognize Utah's divorce of a same sex couple, violating the DOMA and the full faith and credit clause. Johnson is over-reaching and destructive to the sanctity of marriage in this country. It permits Utah courts to hear and determine divorce actions where there is no legally recognizable marriage in any state.

Now, states may not recognize same-sex marriage but will be required to recognize the divorce decree and rights provided for therein which is granted in Utah to a same-sex couple. The fact that a decree can be domesticated in any state, and must be recognized under the full faith and credit clause, requires every state to recognize the divorce of a same-sex couple. Other states are required to uphold and enforce divorce decrees when no marriage existed, in violation of their own laws governing marriage and divorce. Such an outcome implicates the Constitution and the laws of this country. Therefore, certiorari is appropriate to correct the errors of the Utah Supreme Court.

V. By focusing on subject matter jurisdiction, an issue that neither party briefed, the Utah Supreme Court failed to foresee the problematic repercussions implicit in its holding.

The Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson is so broad it creates many problematic repercussions, relating to jurisdiction, separation of powers, and administrative exhaustion.

A. The Johnson Decision Removes the Need for a Common Law Marriage Statute, and Ignores the Lawmaking Authority of the Utah State Legislature.

The State of Utah recognizes only two forms of marriage contracts, those that are solemnized by a properly authorized authority, see Utah Code. Ann. § 30-1-6, and those that obtain an appropriate order of the court to establish a statutory "common law" marriage. See Utah Code Ann. § 30-1-4.5. Utah did not have a common law marriage until 1987 when the Utah Legislature adopted a statute to permit it. Mattes v. Olearain, 759 P.2d 1177, n. 2 (Utah App. 1988).

The Utah Legislature established strict limits upon such a marriage, and the Johnsons did not meet the requirements. They neither attempted to recognize a common law marriage during their marriage, nor within one year of the termination of the relationship, as is required by the statute. Id. The Utah statute provides the following procedure for qualifying an unsolemnized marriage:

(1) A marriage which is not solemnized according to this chapter shall be legal and valid if a court or administrative order establishes that it arises out of a contract between a man and a woman who:

(a) are of legal age and capable of giving consent;

(b) are legally capable of entering a solemnized marriage under the provisions of this chapter;

(c) have cohabited;

(d) mutually assume marital rights, duties, and obligations; and

(e) who hold themselves out as and have acquired a uniform and general reputation as husband and wife.

(2) The determination or establishment of a marriage under this section must occur during the relationship described in Subsection (1), or within one year following the termination of that relationship. Evidence of a marriage recognizable under this section may be manifested in any form, and may be proved under the same general rules of evidence as facts in other cases.

Utah Code Ann. § 30-1-4.5 (emphasis added).

In Johnson, neither party applied under subsection (2) within one year to establish the marriage. This time requirement is a statute of repose, which can not be extended by the mistake or ignorance of the parties. In In Re Marriage of Kunz, 2006 UT App 151, 136 P.3d 1278, 1283-84, the Utah Court of Appeals decided Utah Code Ann. § 30-1-4.5(2) was a statute of repose. The Kunz case states in relevant part as follows:

> ¶ 16 . . . Lillie and Lynne further argue that section 30-1-4.5(2) is a statute of repose, rather than a statute of limitations, and therefore, it cannot be tolled by the discovery rule. See Perry v. Pioneer Wholesale Supply Co., 681 P.2d 214, 219 (Utah 1984) ("A statute of repose generally 'set[s] a designated event for the statutory period to start running and then provide[s] that at the expiration of the period any cause of action is barred regardless of usual reasons for "tolling" the statute.'" (alterations in original) (quoting Restatement (Second) of Torts § 899 cmt. g (1979))). ... The time limit of section 30-1-4.5 runs from the occurrence of a specific event — the termination of the relationship, see id. — and is not related to any injury or legal right. Therefore, we agree with Lillie and Lynne that the one-year time limit of section 30-1-4.5(2) acts as a statute of repose. Consequently, we hold that the discovery rule cannot operate to toll the one-year limit of section 30-1-4.5(2)."

Id., at 1283-84.

Therefore, Utah law had no mechanism for recognizing a common law marriage terminated more than a year past, until Johnson. Now the Utah Supreme Court has established by judicial fiat a new mechanism separate from the legislative mandate, which permit a divorce even when the parties have failed to comply with the requirements to solemnize a legal union, and neglected to comply with the strict statutory requirements for the establishment of a common law marriage.

The decision in Johnson essentially replaces the Utah Legislature as the body controlling the policy over common law marriage. Unlike the statute, now by virtue of the divorce remedy becoming available to anyone even if unmarried, the Legislature has lost any control.

B. Parties No Longer Need Exhaust Administrative Remedies.

As the Utah Supreme Court recognized, though District Courts have the general jurisdiction to adjudicate a matter of administrative law after they have exhausted their administrative remedies, they do not obtain that jurisdiction until after the prerequisite administrative remedies have been exhausted. See Housing Auth. v. Snyder, 2002 UT 28, ¶¶ 9, 11, 44 P.3d 724. The effect of the Utah Supreme Court's holding in Johnson is to ignore such prerequisites.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Petitioner, Neldon Johnson, respectfully requests this Court accept his Petition and grant Certiorari to review the issues affecting his rights.

Respectfully Submitted.

PARRISH, Justice:

INTRODUCTION

¶ 1 Defendant Neldon Johnson appeals the district court's denial of his motion to vacate his divorce decree for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. The district court concluded that the court that granted the divorce decree terminating the marriage of Neldon and Ina Johnson lacked subject matter jurisdiction because the parties were never legally married. It nevertheless judicially estopped Mr. Johnson from asserting lack of subject matter jurisdiction because he had admitted the existence of the marriage in the original divorce proceeding thereby preventing Ms. Johnson from initiating a timely action to establish a statutory marriage under Utah Code section 30-1-4.5 (2007). Because we hold that the original court did in fact have subject matter jurisdiction, we affirm the dismissal of Mr. Johnson's 60(b) motion to vacate the divorce decree.

FACTUAL & PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

¶ 2 The Utah Fourth District Court granted a divorce decree ending the marriage of Neldon and Ina Johnson in June 2001. At that time, the parties stipulated to a $2,800,000 property settlement, which required Mr. Johnson to pay Ms. Johnson $8,333.33 a month, secured by a note and trust deed on Mr. Johnson's company's real and personal property and inventory. Except for a $25,000 court ordered penalty, Mr. Johnson has paid Ms. Johnson nothing under the property settlement. Mr. Johnson has filed many challenges to the divorce decree since stipulating to it, all of which have been denied. These challenges were made as collateral attacks to the divorce decree rather than appeals from it.

¶ 3 In September 2007, Mr. Johnson filed a Motion to Vacate the Decree and Amended Decree of Divorce under Utah Rule of Civil Procedure 60(b) on the grounds that the district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate the divorce as the parties were never legally married, a fact that neither party now denies. Mr. Johnson now appeals the district court's ruling denying the motion to vacate.

¶ 4 When Ms. Johnson filed for divorce, her complaint alleged that the parties had been married on May 3, 1964. Mr. Johnson admitted in his answer that this was true. In reality, however, although the parties had intended to get married on May 3, 1964, car troubles prevented them from carrying out their plan. Instead, the Johnsons spent several days away and when they returned, they told their friends and family that they had married, even though no actual marriage ceremony had taken place. Approximately one year later, Mr. and Ms. Johnson were married in a religious ceremony, but never took steps to have their marriage legally recognized.

¶ 5 The district court denied Mr. Johnson's motion to vacate. Although the court found that the parties were never married and held that the court that issued the divorce decree lacked subject matter jurisdiction, it denied the motion to vacate on the basis that judicial estoppel prevented Mr. Johnson from raising the parties' lack of marriage so long after the issuance of the original decree. We conclude that the original district court had subject matter jurisdiction to grant the divorce decree and therefore affirm. We have jurisdiction [1102] over this matter pursuant to Utah Code section 78A-3-102(3)(j) (2008).

STANDARD OF REVIEW

¶ 6 "A denial of a motion to vacate a judgment under rule 60(b) is ordinarily reversed only for an abuse of discretion." Dep't of Social Servs. v. Vijil, 784 P.2d 1130, 1132 (Utah 1989). However "the propriety of [a] jurisdictional determination, and hence the decision not to vacate, becomes a question of law upon which we do not defer to the district court." Id. Thus, the district court's decision to deny Mr. Johnson's motion to vacate on the basis of a lack of subject matter jurisdiction is a question of law, and we accordingly afford no discretion to that decision. See id.

ANALYSIS

THE DISTRICT COURT HAS JURISDICTION OVER DIVORCES AND THUS HAS SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION TO DETERMINE THE RIGHTS OF PARTIES WHO SUE IN DIVORCE

¶ 7 The original district court had the authority to determine whether Mr. and Mrs. Johnson met the statutory grounds for divorce and thus had subject matter jurisdiction over their divorce proceedings. In Caffall v. Caffall, we determined that a court issuing a divorce decree for a marriage later found to be void did not have subject matter jurisdiction to do so because no marriage existed. 303 P.2d 286, 288 (Utah 1956). We now conclude that this reasoning erroneously expanded the meaning of subject matter jurisdiction and accordingly overrule Caffall.

¶ 8 "Subject matter jurisdiction . . . is the authority of the court to decide the case." Chen v. Stewart, 2004 UT 82, ¶ 38, 100 P.3d 1177. "The district court has original jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal, not excepted in the Utah Constitution and not prohibited by law." Id. (quoting Utah Code Ann. § 78-3-4 (2003)). Usually, "in order to challenge subject matter jurisdiction, [a party is] required to challenge the authority of the court to hear the underlying case." Id.

¶ 9 The concept of subject matter jurisdiction does not embrace all cases where the court's competence is at issue. "Where the court has jurisdiction over the class of case involved, judgment is not void on the ground that the right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted." Perry v. McLaughlin, 754 P.2d 679, 682 (Utah Ct. App. 1988). Rather, the concept of subject matter jurisdiction relates to "the relationship between the claim and the forum that allows for the exercise of jurisdiction." Chen, 2004 UT 82, ¶ 35. Instances where a court lacks subject matter jurisdiction include when a federal court is asked to adjudicate matters of state law with no diversity of citizenship, Stephens v. Wal-mart Stores, 2010 U.S. Dist. Lexis 35506, *4 (M.D. Ga. 2010); when a state court is asked to adjudicate a matter of administrative law when the parties have not exhausted their administrative remedies, Housing Auth. v. Snyder, 2002 UT 28, ¶¶ 9, 11, 44 P.3d 724; or when the statute permitting a party to sue another party requires statutory compliance, as with notice of claim requirements for suit against governmental entities, Thomas v. Lewis, 2001 UT 49, ¶ 20, 26 P.3d 217. In these instances, the court cannot adjudicate the case because it has not been given the authority to do so.

¶ 10 Because parties can raise subject matter jurisdiction at any time during a proceeding, it makes sense to cabin the issues that fall under the category of subject matter jurisdiction. See Chen, 2004 UT 82, ¶ 36 (finding that parties mischaracterized their claim as a lack of subject matter jurisdiction in order to avoid waiver); cf. State v. Norris, 2007 UT 5, ¶ 9, 152 P.3d 305 (finding that a defendant's constitutional challenge to the statute under which he was convicted did not raise a challenge to the court's subject matter jurisdiction). For this reason, most of our cases that have addressed subject matter jurisdiction have considered the authority of the court to adjudicate a class of cases, rather than the specifics of an individual case. In Career Service Review Board v. Utah Department of Corrections, [1103] for instance, we held that the Career Service Review Board (the "Board") did not lose subject matter jurisdiction over a career service employee as a result of the factual intricacies of the case. 942 P.2d 933, 941-42 (Utah 1997). A statute clearly gave the Board jurisdiction over appeals from reprimand decisions of the department of corrections. Id. at 941. Because the Board had statutory authority to consider the appeal, we determined that the specific facts went to the merits rather than to whether the Board had subject matter jurisdiction to hear the appeal in the first place. Id. at 942. We came to a similar conclusion in Chen when we held that a challenge to the court's authority to appoint an interim CEO in the context of a company dispute did not raise an issue of subject matter jurisdiction. 2004 UT 82, ¶ 49. Rather, because the court had the authority to hear the underlying dispute, the challenge was more properly characterized as a challenge to the court's exercise of its equitable powers. Id. 50.

¶ 11 Opinions from other jurisdictions are consistent with this approach. For example, without considering subject matter jurisdiction, Texas courts have held that "a divorce judgment, unappealed, and regular on its face, is not subject to a collateral attack in a subsequent suit." Johnson v. Ventling, 132 S.W.3d 173, 178 (Tex. Ct. App. 2004) (quoting Putegnat v.

Putegnat, 706 S.W.2d 702, 703-04 (Tex. App. 1986)) (refusing to allow district court to reverse a divorce decree four years after it was entered even though the parties stipulated that they had never been married because the district court lost jurisdiction to modify the decree after the thirty-day appeals period had lapsed). And although an Ohio court has ruled that its domestic relations court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate a divorce when there was no underlying marriage, that ruling concerned a court of special jurisdiction rather than, as is the case here, a court of general jurisdiction. Donovan v. Templeton, No. 16204, 1997 Ohio App. LEXIS 2617 at *5-8, (Ohio Ct. App., May 9, 1997). Further, while the Ohio Court of Appeals allowed the matter to be characterized as subject matter jurisdiction, it found that a lack of subject matter jurisdiction premised on "technical or procedural irregularity" is waived if not promptly raised, unlike subject matter jurisdiction concerning the court's "general authority to decide cases within a class." Id. at *7 (internal quotation marks omitted).

¶ 12 The limited definition of subject matter jurisdiction applied in other cases differs significantly from our holding in Caffall, where we held that a district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate a divorce if no underlying marriage exists. 303 P.2d at 288. Because the district court clearly has the authority to adjudicate divorces, looking to the specific facts of a particular case is inconsistent with our usual definition of subject matter jurisdiction. The court of appeals in Van Der Stappen v. Van Der Stappen points out that the Caffall holding is "inconsistent with the generally announced and fundamental legal proposition that 'subject matter jurisdiction is the authority and competency of the court to decide the case,' without which, the court may not validly act." 815 P.2d 1335, 1339 n. 5 (Utah Ct. App. 1991) (quoting Dep't of Social Servs. v. Vijil, 784 P.2d 1130, 1132 (Utah 1989)). Unlike cases where a party has not exhausted its administrative remedies or has failed to comply with statutory prerequisites to suit, "[t]he discovery that the parties never had a valid marriage [does] not . . . divest the court of its authority to resolve the dispute between them." Id. at 1339 n. 8. As a result, the holding in Caffall "unnecessarily blurs the distinction between a mistake as to the exact nature of the subject matter in dispute and the court's ultimate authority and competence to decide the dispute." Id. Just as a court adjudicating a contract dispute has the authority to determine that no contract exists without losing subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute, a court has the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim even if the court later determines that no marriage ever existed. We therefore overrule our holding in Caffall and hold that because courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate divorces, we will not invalidate a divorce decree on the grounds that the "right involved in the suit did not [1104] embrace the relief granted." See Perry, 754 P.2d at 682.

¶ 13 In this case, the district court had subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate Ms. Johnson's petition for divorce. Because Mr. Johnson's motion to vacate the divorce decree under rule 60(b) was premised on the erroneous assumption that the original district court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate the divorce, the motion was properly denied. Although the district court based its denial of the 60(b) motion on other grounds, we are free to affirm the dismissal on any grounds apparent from the record. See First Equity Fed., Inc. v. Phillips Dev., LC, 2002 UT 56, ¶ 11, 52 P.3d 1137.

CONCLUSION

¶ 14 We hold that the original district court that issued the Johnsons' 2001 divorce decree did not lack subject matter jurisdiction and thus Mr. Johnson cannot collaterally attack it. We accordingly affirm the district court's denial of Mr. Johnson's rule 60(b) motion to vacate his divorce decree.

INA MARIE JOHNSON, Petitioner, vs. NELDON PAUL JOHNSON, Respondent.	ORDER DENYING MOTION TO VACATE DECREE OF DIVORCE AND AMENDED DECREE OF DIVORCE AND MOTION TO DISMISS FOR WANT OF SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION Case No.:004401468 Judge Steven Hansen

This matter came on before the Court on February 4, 2008, before Judge Steven Hansen. Present was the Petitioner's counsel Rosemond Blakelock, and the Respondent's counsel, Denver Snuffer.

The Court heard the arguments of both counsel regarding the Respondent's Motion To Vacate Decree of Divorce an Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction, wherein the Respondent was seeking to vacate the underlying divorce decree in this case and to dismiss the action for lack of subject matter. The Court then examined the Memorandums of both parties, the file and the contents therein and deeming itself fully informed in the premises, orders and rules as follows:

1. The Court finds that Respondent claims that the trial court did not have subject matter because the parties were never actually married.

2. The Court finds that the fact pattern in this case is not in dispute and finds that both parties admit that the parties held themselves out as being married for over 37 years, but had never actually been married. The Court finds that the Petitioner filed a Complaint for Divorce, claiming that the parties were married. The Court finds that the Respondent admitted that the parties were married and finds that neither party ever adopted any other position until the Respondent filed the Motion to Vacate now before the Court, claiming that the parties never were married.

3. The Court finds that the Respondent filed his Motion in this matter on October 19, 2007. The Petitioner responded and the Respondent then filed a responsive brief to that of the Petitioner. The matter was then set for oral arguments before the Honorable Steven Hansen.

4. The Court finds that based upon the oral arguments and the pleadings filed in this matter that the case of Caffall v. Caffall, 5 Utah 2d 407, 303 P.22d 286, (Utah 1956) is controlling.

5. The Court finds that the Respondent has maintained the position that he was legally married to the Petitioner through the entire litigation process, until the Motion was filed on October 19, 2007 and finds that the parties held themselves out as husband and wife for nearly thirty seven years, before the Decree of Divorce was granted in this matter.

6. The Court finds that the Petitioner relied on the fact that the Respondent has held himself out as being married to the Petitioner, to her detriment. The Court finds that the Petitioner filed for divorce in the year 2000 and finds that eight years later, long after the Decree of Divorce had been granted, the Respondent filed the instant Motion.

7. The Court finds that had the Respondent filed documents claiming the parties were never married at the initiation of the case, that the Petitioner could have amended her pleadings to establish a common law marriage and would have realized the same results and outcome as are set forth in the parties Amended Decree of Divorce. The Court finds that the matter was never heard by the trial court, but was initially resolved by a mutual stipulation.

8. The Court finds that the Petitioner's act of claiming that the parties were married when she filed the Petition for Divorce, does not preclude her from relying on the final outcome in this matter, when combined with all the other facts in this particular case. The Court finds that the Respondent's claims that the Petitioner has unclean hands do not outweigh the many actions of the Respondent, over the last six years, in attempting to avoid the terms of the Amended Decree of Divorce.

9. The Court finds that an examination of the Court file in this matter demonstrates that the Respondent has a long history of acting in bad faith and further finds that this most recent Motion is yet another attempt to avoid the Respondent's financial obligations to the Petitioner, as set forth in the parties' Amended Decree of Divorce.

10. The Court finds that the elements of the Caffall v. Caffall, case have been met and finds that, as in Caffall, the Respondent/Neldon Johnson acquiesced to the divorce by entering into a stipulated agreement, which resulted in the entrance of the Amended Decree of Divorce, despite knowing that the parties were not married. The Court finds that, as in Caffall, there was a very long delay between the entry of the Amended Decree and the Respondent's Motion to set the Decree aside, which was a period of time from June 27, 2001 to October 19, 2007, which is over six years. The Court finds that Neldon Johnson filed the instant Motion to Vacate as an effort to avoid complying with the terms and obligations of the Respondent, set forth in the Amended Decree of Divorce.

11. The Court finds that the Motion to Vacate Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction filed by Neldon Johnson was another attempt to avoid the terms of the Decree of Divorce that required him to pay sums due and owing to the Petitioner. The Court finds that Neldon Johnson acts, when taken altogether, constitute bad faith.

12. For all the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that the Respondent's Motion to Vacate Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction should be denied because the Respondent is estopped from attacking the Amended Decree, despite any lack of subject matter jurisdiction.

13. The Motion to Vacate Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction is hereby denied.

SIGNED AND DATED this 22nd day of February, 2008.

STATEMENT OF JURISDICTION

In order to establish jurisdiction in this case, Petitioner must meet the requirements of 28 U.S.C. §1257(a) which provides:

> (a) Final judgments or decrees rendered by the highest court of a State in which a decision could be had, may be reviewed by the Supreme Court by writ of certiorari where the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States is drawn in question or where the validity of a statute of any State is drawn in question on the ground of its being repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States, or where any title, right, privilege, or immunity is specially set up or claimed under the Constitution or the treaties or statutes of, or any commission held or authority exercised under, the United States.

The requirements to establish a basis for certiorari are mirrored in Sup. Ct. R. 10 which, in relevant part, states:

> Review on a writ of certiorari is not a matter of right, but of judicial discretion. A petition for a writ of certiorari will be granted only for compelling reasons. The following, although neither controlling nor fully measuring the Court's discretion, indicate the character of the reasons the Court considers:

> (b) a state court of last resort has decided an important federal question in a way that conflicts with the decision of another state court of last resort or of a United States court of appeals;
> (c) a state court or a United States court of appeals has decided an important question of federal law that has not been, but should be, settled by this Court, or has decided an important federal question in a way that conflicts with relevant decisions of this Court. A petition for a writ of certiorari is rarely granted when the asserted error consists of erroneous factual findings or the misapplication of a properly stated rule of law.

The Petition filed in this case, fails on its face, to establish that the Utah Supreme Court either decided an issue even tangentially related to federal law or that the cited decision violates the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution and the Defense of Marriage Act.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Nature of the Underlying Dispute in State Court.

The Petitioner and Respondent were divorced by Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and a Decree entered on June 6, 2001, by a Utah State District Court judge (Citation to the Record on Appeal before the Utah Supreme Court, R. 305-10). An Amended Decree were entered on June 27, 2001 (R. 311-326). Six years after the entry of the Amended Decree and after he had repeatedly been found to have violated the terms of the Amended Decree, the Petitioner filed a motion in the district court in Utah, pursuant to Rule 60(b) of the Utah Rules of Civil Procedure, seeking to have the court vacate the decree of divorce entered six years earlier. The basis of the motion was the Petitioner's sudden recollection that he and the Respondent were not really married in the first place as alleged in all the material pleadings and therefore, the district court did not have subject matter jurisdiction under Utah statute to enter a decree of divorce. The appeal to the Utah Supreme Court, from which the Petition in this case follows, was based upon the Utah district court's denial of the Rule 60(b) Motion to Vacate Decree and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss (R. 2093-2098).

B. Course of Proceedings in the Utah State District Court.

After the entry of the Amended Decree, the Petitioner used every conceivable mechanism, in and out of court, to interfere with the Respondent's efforts to obtain her share of the marital assets. Included in his efforts was an earlier appeal of the matter to the Utah Court of Appeals. In its decision, entered on August 9, 2007, the Utah Court of Appeals upheld the decision of the trial court, as set out in the Order of January 23, 2006, to use contempt proceedings to try and remedy the Appellant's failure to make payments as ordered in the Amended Decree. The decision also upheld the award of attorney fees at the trial court level to the Appellee and further granted her attorney fees on appeal. Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, 234 P.3d 1100 (2010) (R. 1878-1882).

In a continuing effort to thwart the Respondent's effort to locate and retrieve her share of the marital property, which process went on for years, the Petitioner, on September 18, 2007, more than six years after the entry of the Amended Decree, filed a Motion to Vacate the Amended Decree of Divorce and to Dismiss the Action (R. 1884-1913). It is the Utah Supreme Court's review of the disposition of this motion, that the Petition in this case addresses.

The district court judge denied the Petitioner's motion on February 29, 2008 (R. 2092-2098). In relevant part, the Order denying the Appellant's motion to vacate the Amended Decree provides:

> 1. The Court finds that Respondent claims that the trial court did not have subject matter because the parties were never actually married.
> 2. The Court finds that the fact pattern in this case is not in dispute and finds that both parties admit that the parties held themselves out as being married for over 37 years, but had never actually been married. The Court finds that the Petitioner filed a Complaint for Divorce, claiming that the parties were married. The Court finds that the

Respondent admitted that the parties were married and finds that neither party ever adopted any other position until the Respondent filed the Motion to Vacate now before the Court, claiming that the parties never were married.

5. The Court finds that the Respondent has maintained the position that he was legally married to the Petitioner through the entire litigation process, until the Motion was filed on October 19, 2007 and finds that the parties held themselves out as husband and wife for nearly thirty seven years, before the Decree of Divorce was granted in this matter.

6. The Court finds that the Petitioner relied on the fact that the Respondent has held himself out as being married to the Petitioner, to her detriment. The Court finds that the Petitioner filed for divorce in the year 2000 and finds that eight years later, long after the Decree of Divorce had been granted, the Respondent filed the instant Motion.

7. The Court finds that had the Respondent filed documents claiming the parties were never married at the initiation of the case, that the Petitioner could have amended her pleadings to establish a common law marriage and would have realized the same results and outcome as are set forth in the parties Amended Decree of Divorce. The Court finds that the matter was never heard by the trial court, but was initially resolved by a mutual stipulation.

9. The Court finds that an examination of the Court file in this matter demonstrates that the Respondent has a long history of acting in bad faith and further finds that this most recent Motion is yet another attempt to avoid the Respondent's financial obligations to the Petitioner, as set forth in the parties' Amended Decree of Divorce.

10. The Court finds that the elements of the Caffall v. Caffall, case have been met and finds that, as in Caffall, the Respondent/ Neldon Johnson acquiesced to the divorce by entering into a stipulated agreement, which resulted in the entrance of the Amended Decree of Divorce, despite knowing that the parties were not married. The Court finds that, as in Caffall, there was a very long delay between the entry of the Amended Decree and the Respondent's Motion to set the Decree aside, which was a period of time from June 27, 2001 to October 19, 2007, which is over six years. The Court finds that Neldon Johnson filed the instant Motion to Vacate as an effort to avoid complying with the terms and obligations of the Respondent, set forth in the Amended Decree of Divorce.

11. The Court finds that the Motion to Vacate Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction filed by Neldon

> Johnson was another attempt to avoid the terms of the Decree of Divorce that required him to pay sums due and owing to the Petitioner. The Court finds that Neldon Johnson acts, when taken altogether, constitute bad faith.
> 12. For all the foregoing reasons, the Court finds that the Respondent's Motion to Vacate Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction should be denied because the Respondent is estopped from attacking the Amended Decree, despite any lack of subject matter jurisdiction.
> 13. The Motion to Vacate Decree of Divorce and Amended Decree of Divorce and Motion to Dismiss for Want of Subject Matter Jurisdiction is hereby denied.

R. 2092-2098, see Order Denying Motion, Appendix B.

The Petitioner appealed from the Utah district court order to the Utah Supreme Court, who rendered its decision affirming the denial of the Petitioner's motion, in Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, 234 P.3d 1100 (2010). Declining to affirm the denial of Petitioner's motion on the basis of judicial estoppel, the doctrine employed by the district court, the Utah Supreme Court used the occasion to hone the definition of "subject matter jurisdiction." In doing so, the Utah Supreme Court reversed its earlier decision in Caffall v. Caffall, 303 P.2d 286 (Utah 1956), where they held that a district court lacks subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate a divorce if no underlying marriage exists.

In its decision, the Utah Supreme Court embraced the comments of the Utah Court of Appeals in Van Der Stappen v. Van Der Stappen, 815 P.2d 1335, 1339 n.5 (Utah Ct. App. 1991) (quoting Dep't of Social Servs. v. Vijil, 784 P.2d 1130, 1132 (Utah 1989)) that the Caffall holding was "inconsistent with the generally announced and fundamental legal proposition that 'subject matter jurisdiction is the authority and competency of the court to decide the case,' without which, the court may not validly act." The appellate court noted that unlike cases where a party has not exhausted its administrative remedies or has failed to comply with statutory prerequisites to suit, "[t]he discovery that the parties never had a valid marriage [does] not . . . divest the court of its authority to resolve the dispute between them." Id. at 1339 n.8.

The Utah Supreme Court, agreeing with the reasoning in Van Der Stappen, held that the holding in Caffall "unnecessarily blurred the distinction between a mistake as to the exact nature of the subject matter in dispute and the court's ultimate authority and competence to decide the dispute." Id. The court held that just as a court adjudicating a contract dispute has the authority to determine that no contract exists without losing subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute, a court has the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim even if the court later determines that no marriage ever existed. Id. Simply, Utah courts will not invalidate a divorce decree on the grounds that the "right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted." Id.

There is simply nothing in the holding of the Utah Supreme Court that violates federal law, comments on federal court jurisdiction, or, is contrary to the Defense of Marriage Act. In fact, the holding brings Utah's law in conformity with the established law across the country.

C. Underlying Facts.

The Respondent, when she filed for divorce against the Petitioner in the district court of Utah alleged in paragraph two of her complaint that "[t]he parties are husband and wife, having been married on May 3, 1964 in Arizona" (R. 4). In the first order to show cause it was alleged in paragraph three that the parties were married on May 3, 1964 and that they had been married for thirty-six years (R. 13). In the Petitioner's Answer to the Complaint, he admitted the allegations contained in paragraph two of the Complaint (R. 44). Throughout the Petitioner's own affidavit for an order to show cause filed on August 18, 2000, he acknowledges that the parties had been husband and wife continuously (R. 45-47).

At no time from the filing of the Complaint on July 20, 2000 (R. 1-4) to the day that the Petitioner filed his motion to dismiss based upon subject matter jurisdiction, on September 18, 2007 (a period of more than seven years), did either party dispute the fact that they had been formally married on the date set out in the complaint and had lived together as husband and wife thereafter. Neither party disputed that during the time they lived together from May 3, 1964, to the time the parties separated at the commencement of the divorce action, they had held themselves out as husband and wife to the community, held property as husband and wife, operated joint bank accounts, encouraged a general reputation in the community as being husband and wife; and significantly, filed joint federal and state tax returns avowing that they were legally married and thereby reaping the benefits of the "married" filing status. During the entire course of proceedings, neither party denied that, at the time of the divorce, the parties had been married thirty-seven (37) years.

The record in this divorce matter reflects that the matter was bifurcated to allow the parties to be divorced on June 6, 2001, before the substantive issues in their case were decided (R. 243-248, 307-310). An Amended Decree of Divorce was ultimately entered with appropriate findings, on June 27, 2001, which were to be effective as of May 29, 2001 (R. 311-326). Both parties were represented by counsel during the proceeding and the Amended Decree was the product of a Stipulation recited on the record and accepted by both parties and their attorneys.

In summary, the Amended Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Amended Decree awarded the Petitioner the family home and miscellaneous cash. The Respondent was awarded the major asset of the marriage, eight million shares of International Automated Systems, also known as "U-Check." To balance the equation and compensate for the waiver of alimony, the Respondent was awarded $2,800,000, that the Petitioner was to pay, in monthly payments, commencing, July 1, 2001, in the sum of $8,333.33. The Respondent's interest was to be secured by a trust deed and trust deed note in certain real property and assets.

There is no question that after the Amended Decree of Divorce was entered on June 27, 2001, no Rule 50, 59 or 60 motions were made by the Petitioner challenging the status of the parties as husband and wife. At no time during the divorce proceedings or thereafter, to the date the Petitioner filed his motion on September 18, 2007, did the Petitioner disavow his representations to the Utah district court, to the community, to state and federal tax agencies, that he and the Respondent were "married" as carefully established in the pleadings invoking the district court's jurisdiction.

The facts of this case reveal that the Petitioner, who is an intelligent, well-educated business man, filed the motion to vacate and dismiss as another, in a long continuous line, of attempts to thwart the terms of the Amended Decree of Divorce, to which he stipulated. The Petitioner, as the record detailed below reveals, has been derelict in his duties under the Amended Decree from the time of its entry to the present day. A snapshot of the Petitioner's conduct is detailed from the court record and docket as follows. In Findings of Fact and Order from the enforcement proceedings, signed on September 18, 2002 (R. 789-796), the court found that the Petitioner's testimony was not credible and in fact, "absurd" and "nonsensical." In Paragraph 8 of the same order, the trial court found that "the [Petitioner] converted $22,500.00 of funds, that were intended by the Court to be paid to [Respondent] for his own use." Id. (Emphasis added). The trial court found in Paragraph 9 of the Findings that "the [Petitioner] willfully disobeyed the previous orders of the Court." Id. Paragraph 10 states "[t]hat the Court finds the [Petitioner] had the ability to obey the previous orders of the Court but failed to do so." (Emphasis added). Id. In Paragraph 11, the trial court found the "[Petitioner] is in contempt of Court, for his willful refusal to follow the orders of the Court." (Emphasis added). Id.

In Paragraph 19 of the same order, the court found that the Petitioner had admitted that he, having the ability to do so, simply chose not to make the monthly payments to the Respondent. Id.

Every time the district court would enter an order allowing collection of the monies due the Respondent, the Petitioner would employ another diversionary tactic. For instance, the Petitioner filed a Motion to set Aside the Amended Decree under Rule 60(b)(4), claiming that the Amended Decree was void (R. 1076-1086). The Petitioner claimed that the stipulated language in the Amended Decree was vague and ambiguous. Id. Importantly, the Petitioner made no claim regarding the legitimacy of the marriage of the parties. The Petitioner filed motions to disqualify judges and postpone hearing repeatedly (R. 1095-1100). During all the time it took to resolve these issues, the Petitioner failed to make one single payment under the Amended Decree.

When the Petitioner's motions were all denied, he filed motions to set aside and amend the orders and then appealed for the first time to the Utah Court of Appeals (R. 1103-1104, 1283-1285, 1308, 1705-1707, 1716-1717, 1943-1945). All issues were resolved in favor of the Respondent on appeal and she was granted attorney fees both at the trial court and appellate level (R. 1878-1882).

Unable to conceive any more arguments to avoid the obligations to which he stipulated, the Petitioner Appellant resorted to claiming that he did not know what he was doing when he represented to this Court that he was married on a specific day in 1964.

ARGUMENT

The Petitioner's entire argument is based upon a faulty premise that the Utah Supreme Court in Johnson v. Johnson, removed the jurisdictional prerequisite that the parties allege the existence of a marriage to invoke the jurisdiction of the court of general jurisdiction to grant a divorce. A simple reading of the decision reveals that the Utah Supreme Court's ruling does nothing to amend, alter or replace the requirement of an allegation in the initial complaint that the parties are married. The decision does nothing to contravene the state statutes vesting jurisdiction in divorce matters with the district court of Utah, the court of general jurisdiction. There is not a single word in the decision that comments on federal jurisdiction or expands the right of federal courts to hear divorce or related cases in Utah.

The Utah Supreme Court, in its decision, simply refined the application of subject matter jurisdiction to divorce actions and in so doing, applied principles accepted and applied by state courts across the country.

In this case, the Petitioner and Respondent both attested to the trial court in Utah that they were husband and wife. The trial court granted the decree of divorce in this matter based upon the clear and unambiguous attestation by both parties that not only were the parties married, but that they had been married for thirty-six years. All the evidence supported the allegation. All financial accounts were joint accounts. The parties filed joint federal and state returns and held themselves out to the community to be married. The issue the Utah Supreme Court had to address related to the allegation made nearly seven years after the decree of divorce had been entered that the parties had never really been married. It was to that specific fact scenario that the court addressed subject matter jurisdiction. The court held that just as a court adjudicating a contract dispute has the authority to determine that no contract exists without losing subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute, a court has the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim even if the court later determines that no marriage ever existed. Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, 234 P.3d 1100 (2010). Simply, the Utah Supreme Court held that Utah courts will not invalidate a divorce decree on the grounds that the "right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted." Id.

I. The Consistency of a Decision of the Utah Supreme Court with a Utah Statute or State Constitution does not Provide a basis for this Court to Exercise Jurisdiction.

There is no dispute in this matter as to the jurisdictional allegations that the Petitioner must make and establish in order to provide a basis for this Court to grant the relief requested in the Petition. 28 U.S.C. §1257(a) (2010) requires that the subject state court decision 1) relate to the validity of a treaty or statute of the United States; or, 2) relate to a statute of any State that is alleged to be repugnant to the Constitution, treaties, or laws of the United States; or, 3) involve any title, right, privilege, or immunity [ ] specially set up or claimed under the Constitution or the treaties or statutes of, or any commission held or authority exercised under, the United States.

Sup. Ct. R. 10 contains a description of the general character of the basis of a petition that would invoke review on a writ of certiorari. They include allegations that,

> (b) a state court of last resort has decided an important federal question in a way that conflicts with the decision of another state court of last resort or of a United States court of appeals;
> (c) a state court or a United States court of appeals has decided an important question of federal law that has not been, but should be, settled by this Court, or has decided an important federal question in a way that conflicts with relevant decisions of this Court. . . .

In Point I of the Petition, it is alleged that the Utah Supreme Court decision, in Johnson, is unconstitutional because it produces a result that is inconsistent with Utah's Constitution. Whether or not a decision by a state's highest court correctly interprets its own laws and statutes in light of the state constitution, is not a basis for a review by this Court. The law is clear that whether or not a state statute or decision violates the state's constitution simply did not confer jurisdiction on this Court. Withers v. Buckley, 61 U.S. 84 (1858); Salomons v. Graham, 82 U.S. 208 (1872); Levy v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 167 U.S. 175 (1897); Miller v. Cornwall R. Co., 168 U.S. 131 (1897).

Respondent submits that is nothing in the Johnson decision that relates to a legitimate federal question or to federal statutes, treaties or other laws. In fact, at no time, did the Utah Supreme Court mention, interpret or construe any federal statutes related to marriage or divorce. The failure, in this first point, to relate the Johnson decision to inconsistency with the United States Constitution is a tacit admission of the lack of any suitable jurisdictional basis for this Court to review the matter.

In direct response to the allegation made repeatedly throughout the Petition, that the decision in Johnson somehow opens the floodgates to unmarried persons obtaining relief under the divorce statutes of Utah, it is necessary to accurately set out the precise holding of the Utah Supreme Court. By addressing the issue raised in the first point, the Respondent is not waiving her position that even if everything alleged in the first point of the Petition is true, it does not raise a basis upon which this Court could accept and review the Petition.

In the subject decision, the Utah Supreme Court held that it did not have to resort to judicial estoppel, as a basis to affirm the trial court's denial of the motion to set aside the divorce decree filed by the Petitioner. Instead, the court held that the Utah district court, indeed, had subject matter jurisdiction to grant the divorce and did not lose jurisdiction nearly seven years later when the decree was attached.

The Utah Supreme Court noted that except for a $25,000 court ordered penalty, Mr. Johnson has paid Ms. Johnson nothing of the $2,800,000, under the property settlement. Further, the court noted that Mr. Johnson had filed many challenges to the divorce decree since stipulating to it, all of which have been denied. All the challenges, the court found were made as collateral attacks to the divorce decree rather than appeals from it.

Importantly, the court noted that this was a case where the original jurisdiction of the court was properly invoked because both sides attested to the fact that they were married when the complaint was filed. Accordingly, there is nothing in the decision that mystically would allow parties who did not allege marriage, to gain access to the courts under the divorce statutes. In clear language, the court held:

> The original district court had the authority to determine whether Mr. and Mrs. Johnson met the statutory grounds for divorce and thus had subject matter jurisdiction over their divorce proceedings.

Id.

The Utah Supreme Court then expressly overruled their decision in Caffall v. Caffall, 303 P.2d 286, 288 (Utah 1956), where it determined that a court issuing a divorce decree for a marriage later found to be void did not have subject matter jurisdiction to do so because no marriage existed. The court held that the reasoning in Caffall erroneously expanded the meaning of subject matter jurisdiction. Id.

The Court then launched into a discussion of subject matter jurisdiction and noted that subject matter jurisdiction is the authority of the court to decide the case. The court then acknowledged that pursuant to state statute, the district court has original jurisdiction in all civil matters not excepted in the Utah Constitution and not prohibited by law. From that logic, the court then, embracing language from an earlier case, held that "[w]here the court has jurisdiction over the class of case involved, judgment is not void on the ground that the right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted." Id. (citing Perry v. McLaughlin, 754 P.2d 679, 682 (Utah Ct. App. 1988)).

The court cited opinions from other jurisdictions that were consistent with its holding. The court referenced Texas courts that have held that "a divorce judgment, unappealed, and regular on its face, is not subject to a collateral attack in a subsequent suit." Johnson v. Ventling, 132 S.W.3d 173, 178 (App. 2004).

The court then held that unlike cases where a party has not exhausted its administrative remedies or has failed to comply with statutory prerequisites to suit, "the discovery that the parties never had a valid marriage [does] not . . . divest the court of its authority to resolve the dispute between them." Id. at 1339 n.8. The court then concluded that,

> Just as a court adjudicating a contract dispute has the authority to determine that no contract exists without losing subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute, a court has the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim even if the court later determines that no marriage ever existed. We therefore overrule our holding in Caffall and hold that because courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate divorces, we will not invalidate a divorce decree on the grounds that the "right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted." [citing case].

Id.

As revealed by a reading of the case, the Utah Supreme Court has not rendered an opinion that is inconsistent with the underlying divorce statutes or Utah Constitution. More importantly, the Petitioner has failed to establish any relationship between the decision and federal law, statutes or significant federal questions.

II. The Utah Supreme Court's Decision has no Effect on the Jurisdiction of Federal Courts to Hear Divorce Actions.

In Point II of the Petition, the argument is made that the decision in Johnson eliminated the requirement of subject matter jurisdiction in order to render a decision in a divorce case and therefore has opened the gates for federal courts to hear divorce matters. As carefully set out in Point I, the decision did not, in any respect, affect or alter the state constitutional and statutory exclusive delegation of divorce matters to Utah state court judges. The Utah Supreme Court did not undertake any reasoning that could possibly be construed to address the scope of federal jurisdiction. Any decision of a state court relating to jurisdiction could not possibly be construed as endowing federal courts with increased jurisdiction.

Federal courts do not base their jurisdiction on state law, state statutes or pronouncements. Even if a state court were to remove any and all jurisdictional prerequisites for the filing of a particular type of case, that would not affect the scope and breadth of federal jurisdiction. Jurisdiction in diversity cases is based upon federal statute. 28 U.S.C. §1332 provides in relevant part:

> (a) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of all civil actions where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $75,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and is between – (1) Citizens of different States; (2) citizens of a State and citizens or subjects of a foreign state; (3) citizens of different States and in which citizens or subjects of a foreign state are additional parties; and (4) a foreign state, defined in section 1603(a) of this title. . . .

No state court decision could change the jurisdictional requirements for a diversity action or invest the federal court with additional subject matter jurisdictional province. Because the decision in Johnson did not address in any regard the jurisdiction of federal courts or the interpretation of any related federal statute, this argument simply fails to provide a basis for this Court to accept the Petition filed in this case.

However, the issue of whether a federal court could hear a divorce matter has long been decided. This Court has recognized that diversity jurisdiction does not exist for domestic relations cases involving divorce, alimony, and child custody matters. Ankenbrandt v. Richards, 504 U.S. 689 (1992). See also, McCarty v. McCarty, 453 U.S. 210 (1981) (finding that domestic relations matters are the province of state law). This Court has specifically stated that federal courts have no jurisdiction over actions involving divorce because this area has been traditionally left to state courts and is an area in which state courts have developed expertise. Ankenbrandt, supra. The Court explained that divorce matters "not infrequently involve retention of jurisdiction by the court" and that state courts are in a better position to handle such matters. Additionally, the Supreme Court has found that the federal government has no power to regulate any aspect of domestic relations law. Popovici v. Agler, 280 U.S. 379 (1930). Only state courts have jurisdiction over domestic relations matters, and their jurisdiction is statutory in nature. Yuk Shau Mui v. Wing, 822 F.2d 1089 (1987).

Federal courts have been consistent in holding that although a domestic relations case may meet the technical requirements for diversity jurisdiction, federal courts refrain from exercising jurisdiction over cases which in essence are domestic relations disputes. Gray v. Richardson, 474 F.2d 1370, 1373 (6th Cir. 1973); Gargallo v. Gargallo, 472 F.2d 1219, 1220 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 805, 94 S. Ct. 77, 38 L. Ed. 2d 41 (1973). Even when brought under the guise of a federal question action, a suit whose substance is domestic relations generally will not be entertained in a federal court. Denman v. Leedy, 479 F.2d 1097, 1098 (6th Cir. 1973).

The argument that the Johnson decision overtly or by implication affected federal jurisdiction over divorces in Utah, simply is not based upon any recognizable principle of law. The argument fails to fulfill any basis for jurisdiction to grant the Petition in this case.

III. State High Courts Cannot Enhance Federal Diversity jurisdiction.

Point III of the Petition makes a very curious argument. After setting out the extensive list of cases that have held that federal courts cannot and do not exercise diversity jurisdiction in domestic cases (which precedence is in direct contravention to the argument Petitioner makes in Point II that the Johnson decision will open the floodgates to divorce litigation in federal courts), Petitioner states that the Johnson case will provide a jurisdictional basis for federal courts to hear domestic cases. The argument is tantamount, again, to stating that a state court can prescribe the scope and breadth of federal court jurisdiction in diversity or other cases.

The fact is that even if a state statute and a state high court decision purported to vest additional jurisdiction in a federal court, it would be a nullity. This Court in Marshall v. Marshall, 547 U.S. 293 (2006), could not be clearer. In affirming its ruling in Ankenbrandt, supra, this Court clearly stated once that "divorce, alimony, and child custody decrees" remain outside federal jurisdictional bounds. Id.

Federal courts are courts of limited jurisdiction and there is absolutely no law, federal or state, that holds that any state, by and through legislation or court decision, can invest or divest a federal court with jurisdiction. The argument of the Petitioner is once again baseless and does not provide a basis under the statute or this Court's rule to grant the Petition.

IV. The Decision in Johnson does not Contravene Public Policy or Conflict with the Defense of Marriage Act or Article IV of the U.S. Constitution.

In Point IV of the Petition, it is alleged that the decision in Johnson somehow violates public policy. The precise portion of the decision that the Petition attacks is that "[t]he district court has jurisdiction to determine the rights of parties who sue in divorce." Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28. Petition, page 17. The fact is that there is nothing in the cited language that is new at all. As acknowledged by the Petitioner, the Utah statutes relating to divorce vest jurisdiction with the state district courts. U.C.A. §78-5-102(1) (2010) provides that "[t]he district court has original jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal, not excepted in the Utah Constitution and not prohibited by law."

Importantly, the decision in Johnson does not change, alter or amend the clear statutory requirements relating to the filing of an action "in divorce." U.C.A. §30-3-1 (2010) states:

> (1) Proceedings in divorce are commenced and conducted as provided by law for proceedings in civil causes, except as provided in this chapter.
> (2) The court may decree a dissolution of the marriage contract between the petitioner and respondent on the grounds specified in Subsection (3) in all cases where the petitioner or respondent has been an actual and bona fide resident of this state and of the county where the action is brought, or if members of the armed forces of the United States who are not legal residents of this state, where the petitioner has been stationed in this state under military orders, for three months next prior to the commencement of the action.

After the decision in Johnson, every litigant filing a complaint in Utah district court "for divorce" has had to allege that they were bona fide residents of the county in which they filed for a period of three months prior to the time of filing, that they were married to the other party and that there were grounds for divorce as required by the statute. The decision in Johnson has simply not affected, in any degree, the requirements set out above. The impact of Johnson, is that once the jurisdiction of the district court is properly invoked by the requisite representations that there is residency, a marriage and grounds, the district court will not be divested of jurisdiction as it is determined after the fact that there was no marriage.

It is hard to stand by and allow the Petitioner to address equity and public policy. The Petitioner is a man who has taken essentially all of the assets from a 36 year association for his own purposes and then, although clearly having the ability consisting of millions of dollars, has used the court system to avoid paying the Respondent her share of the estate. The monthly payment of $8,333.33 represents not only the Respondent's share of property, but her right to subsistence or alimony. The Petitioner has sat back, every month for over nine years and allowed the Respondent to scramble to meet monthly expenses while at the same time, trying to bring the Petitioner to justice.

There is another aspect that needs to be addressed in discussing public policy. U.C.A. §30-1-4.5 (1987), provided a mechanism for the Respondent to obtain the same relief that she obtained in the divorce, if the claim that there was no marriage had been made during the initial proceeding. The statute recognized marriages not solemnized by formal proceedings. The statute states:

> (1) A marriage which is not solemnized according to this chapter shall be legal and valid if a court or administrative order establishes that it arises out of a contract between a man and a woman who: (a) are of legal age and capable of giving consent; (b) are legally capable of entering a solemnized marriage under the provisions of this chapter; (c) have cohabited; (d) mutually assume marital rights, duties, and obligations; and (e) who hold themselves out as and have acquired a uniform and general reputation as husband and wife.
> (2) The determination or establishment of a marriage under this section must occur during the relationship described in Subsection (1), or within one year following the termination of that relationship. Evidence of a marriage recognizable under this section may be manifested in any form, and may be proved under the same general rules of evidence as facts in other cases.

Id.

Had the Petitioner timely asserted his contention that the court did not have subject matter jurisdiction, the Respondent could have invoked the court's jurisdiction under this statute. Because the Petitioner's repudiation of his prior sworn representation that a marriage existed did not occur within one year of the parties' separation and entry of the decree, the statutory version of "common law marriage" became unavailable to her. There is no question that the loss of the use of the statute provides proof of cataclysmic reliance on the Petitioner's representation in these proceedings. Further, it demonstrates once again that the Petitioner is only interested in trying to delay and impede the Respondent's efforts to collect what is rightfully hers.

The insidious nature of the Petitioner's tactic is clear. If allowed, it would form the basis for similar actions by other disgruntled parties to a "marriage." A party, knowing that there was a fundamental flaw with the marriage (divorce not finalized, marriage ceremony not official or other defect) could proceed through a divorce misrepresenting the existence of the marriage to the court; and then, if unhappy with the results, wait one year to allow the expiration of the remedies provided in U.C.A. §30-1-4.5, and move to set aside the decree based upon subject matter jurisdiction. The maneuver would deny a wronged party of the explicit remedy crafted by the statute to allow the establishment of a marriage without a formal ceremony.

In any event, there is simply nothing in Johnson, as claimed by Petitioner, that removes the requirement of alleging, upon the filing of a divorce complaint that the parties are married. Therefore the entire argument of the Petitioner in Point IV of the Petition fails.

The Petitioner's remaining arguments in Point IV of the Petition are so contrived and baseless that no response should be required. Petitioner argues that because no allegation of marriage is required to invoke the district court's jurisdiction to grant a divorce, under-age and same-sex associations (which are not "marriages" under Utah statute, U.C.A. §30-1-1 et seq.) would be awarded "divorces" that would have to be enforced by the Full Faith and Credit provisions of the United States Constitution. See U.S. Const., Art. IV, §1. Again, there is nothing in Johnson that would allow under-age, same-sex or other associations that are not marriages as defined by Utah Statutes to file a successful complaint for divorce. In order to invoke the district court's jurisdiction to grant a divorce, the parties would have to allege the jurisdictional prerequisites.

What the Petitioner is missing is the beauty of the remedy fashioned in this case by the Utah Supreme Court. If parties who alleged that they were married were found in the original proceedings not to have a legal marriage under Utah law, the district court would continue to exert jurisdiction, but grant only the relief to which the parties were entitled – partition, dissolution of partnership, etc. The district court would be free to review the common-law statute to see if the parties met the jurisdictional requirements for that relief. There is nothing in Johnson that would entitle parties who were proven not to be married in the original proceedings, to be given a decree of divorce. As opposed to that hypothetical situation, the facts in this case establish that the trial court granted a divorce to two parties who swore that they were married. The decree was properly entered. The Utah Supreme Court simply stated that when one party then, nearly seven years later, attacks collaterally the decree, the original jurisdiction of the court will not be disturbed.

Finally, the Petitioner's only reference to a federal statute that could be impacted by Johnson is to the Defense of Marriage Act, 28 U.S.C. §1738C, which provides that,

> No State, territory, or possession of the United States, or Indian tribe, shall be required to give effect to any public act, record, or judicial proceeding of any other State, territory, possession, or tribe respecting a relationship between persons of the same sex that is treated as a marriage under the laws of such other State, territory, possession, or tribe, or a right or claim arising from such relationship.

In order to make the statute relevant, one has to believe that Johnson removes the requirements for jurisdictional allegations in a divorce case and that the district court will have to grant divorce relief to anyone requesting it regardless of their status as partners, associates, couples, etc. Then, one has to believe that same-sex associations, who had obtained a divorce in Utah would try to enforce those provisions in other states under Full Faith and Credit. Amazingly, even if all the above were true, which it is not, the Petitioner would still not be entitled to prevail.

The Defense of Marriage Act provides the receiving state a federal legislative mandate that it does not have to honor the bogus Utah decree. Petitioner argues that the misconstrued holding in Johnson is counter to the statute. Instead, the statute clearly provides protection for the state, who Petitioner argues will be burdened with having to enforce a same-sex decree that is not countenanced in that state. If parties went to a state where same-sex divorces were not recognized, the cited statute would be the means to avoid having to enforce the same.

Again, it is respectfully submitted that the Petitioner has utterly failed to establish an federal question cited in the jurisdictional statutes upon which this Court may exercise jurisdiction.

CONCLUSION

Based upon the foregoing, Respondent, Ina Johnson, respectfully submits that this Court decline to accept the Petition filed in this case on the basis that the Petitioner has failed to provide a jurisdictional or compelling basis therefore.

ARGUMENT

This Court should grant certiorari to clarify the Utah Supreme Court's ruling in Johnson v. Johnson, 2010 UT 28, 234 P.3d 1100 (Utah 2010). Essentially, the Johnson decision allows a court to grant a divorce to those who have any form of domestic partnership arrangement, whether legal or illegal, recognized or unrecognized, because marriage is no longer required in Utah for a divorce.

Here, the parties and the Utah courts all agree on one thing: the Johnsons were never married. Respondent Ina Johnson alleged a marriage existed and Petitioner admitted to a marriage, but the parties were never married. The Utah Supreme Court that the district court had subject matter jurisdiction to grant a divorce when there was no marriage. After this decision, it is clear the only requirement to satisfy the marital element of jurisdiction in Utah (or possibly any other jurisdictional element) is an allegation of marriage. The allegation does not have to be true. It just has to be made.

Respondent Ina Johnson argues the Utah Supreme Court's decision has no effect on federal law or federal subject matter jurisdiction. She further argues the decision does not conflict with the DOMA or other federal law. However, Respondent Ina Johnson's argument is flawed and fails to recognize the expansive scope of the Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson.

The Utah Supreme Court's decision in Johnson contravenes federal law by implicating DOMA and other federal benefit programs and requiring these programs to recognize illegal or void marriages. Further, the decision alters the scope of subject matter jurisdiction, limiting its application in the domestic arena and no longer requiring subject matter jurisdiction to obtain a divorce in Utah.

This Court should grant certiorari to clarify the Utah Supreme Court's decision and reconcile it with federal law.

I. The Utah Supreme Court's ruling in Johnson contravenes DOMA because it allows parties to void or illegal "marriages" to receive benefits from federal entitlement programs, contrary to federal law.

Respondent Ina Johnson argues "there is nothing in Johnson that would allow under-age, same-sex or other associations that are not marriages as defined by Utah Statutes to file a successful complaint for divorce." (See Brief in Opposition of Respondent, p. 29.) However, the decision in Johnson has that effect unless clarified. The Utah Supreme Court upheld a divorce between these parties when there was never a marriage, as required by statute. The Johnson decision is extremely broad, and paves the way for a broad line of decisions requiring other states to recognize Utah's divorce of a same sex couple, an underage couple, or a couple that was never lawfully married, in violation of the DOMA and the full faith and credit clause.

Respondent Ina Johnson fails to consider the difference between pleading a marriage and having a marriage. The decision in Johnson does not alter the language of the statute, but it does alter how the language is interpreted and applied. Now, a mere allegation of marriage is sufficient to invoke a Utah court's general jurisdiction to grant a divorce even if its later proved to be false or violate state and federal laws.

Article IV of the United States Constitution states "Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State." U.S. Const., Art. IV, Sec. 1. However, Congress adopted the DOMA, which states "No State ... of the United States ... shall be required to give effect to any ... judicial proceeding of any other State ... respecting a relationship between persons of the same sex that is treated as a marriage under the law of such other State...." 28 U.S.C. § 1738C.

The Johnson decision is at odds with both of the Constitution and a federal statute. As to federal law, a same-sex couple who obtains a divorce in Utah, and the divorce decree grants one party a portion of the other party's federal retirement benefits, then federal entitlement benefits are implicated by the decree. The same-sex marriage is dissolved, but both same-sex partners receive a portion of federal retirement benefits, in violation of federal law.

The Utah Supreme Court has found a loophole around the DOMA. The decision extends even farther because if one of the same-sex partners chooses to domesticate the divorce decree in another state, that state is required to enforce the decree, even though the state does not recognize same-sex marriages. This result is contrary to DOMA, but required under the full faith and credit clause of Article IV. Thus, the Johnson decision puts the DOMA odds with the full faith and credit clause of the U.S. Constitution. The DOMA was designed to prevent such a result, but the Utah Supreme Court now allows for the opposite to occur. This decision implicates federal law and is an important federal question justifying certiorari.

Now, states that may not recognize a same-sex marriage will be required to recognize the divorce decree of a same-sex couple obtained in Utah and the rights thereby established. The fact a decree can be domesticated in any state, and must be recognized under the full faith and credit clause, requires every state to recognize the divorce of a same-sex couple. This holds true for the recognition of a same-sex marriage, a bigamous marriage, or an underage marriage. Other states are required to uphold and enforce divorce decrees when no marriage existed, in violation of their own laws governing marriage and divorce. Such an outcome implicates the Constitution and the laws of this country. Therefore, certiorari is appropriate to correct the errors of the Utah Supreme Court.

II. The Utah Supreme Court's ruling in Johnson impacts federal diversity jurisdiction.

Respondent Ina Johnson argues "[n]o state court decision could change the jurisdictional requirement for a diversity action or invest the federal court with additional subject matter jurisdictional province." (See Brief in Opposition of Respondent, p. 21.) Again, Respondent fails to comprehend the breadth of the Johnson decision and its impact on subject matter jurisdiction.

Respondent correctly notes the Utah Supreme Court cannot change the jurisdictional requirement for diversity action. (Id.) The Johnson decision does not affect a diversity action nor is Petitioner arguing the decision has any effect on diversity requirements. Instead, the Johnson decision penetrates the heart of the domestic-relations exception, set forth in Ankenbrandt v. Richards, 504 U.S. 687 (1992). Respondent fails to acknowledge the Johnson decision allows a court applying Utah law, whether a state or federal court, to exercise subject-matter jurisdiction over a divorce proceeding, as long as it is a court of general jurisdiction. Specifically, the Utah Supreme Court stated:

> Just as a court adjudicating a contract dispute has the authority to determine that no contract exists without losing subject matter jurisdiction over the dispute, a court has the authority to adjudicate a divorce claim even if the court later determines that no marriage ever existed. We therefore overrule our holding in Caffall and hold that because courts of general jurisdiction have the authority to adjudicate divorces, we will not invalidate a divorce decree on the > grounds that the 'right involved in the suit did not embrace the relief granted.'

Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶ 12 (citing Perry v. McLaughlin, 754 P.2d 679, 682 (Utah App. 1988)).

This holding broadly construes any court's jurisdiction over any domestic dispute. If a court of general jurisdiction can entertain an action in divorce, even if the parties were never married or the marriage is illegal or not recognized under Utah law, then that removes the pre-requisite of subject-matter jurisdiction and allows any court, state or federal, applying Utah law to entertain a divorce action. See Johnson, 2010 UT at ¶ 12. Thus, if subject matter jurisdiction is irrelevant to divorce actions, then federal courts applying Utah law can entertain divorce actions if the parties meet the requirements of 28 U.S.C. § 1332. The decision is contrary to Ankerbrandt and its progeny.

Further, the Johnson decision is contrary to the definition of subject-matter jurisdiction. This Court has set forth the requirements of subject matter jurisdiction, stating "[s]ubject matter jurisdiction defines the court's authority to hear a given type of case." United States v. Morton, 467 U.S. 822, 828 (1984). "It represents 'the extent to which a court can rule on the conduct of persons or the status of things.'" Carlsbad Technology, Inc. v. HIF Bio, Inc., ___ U.S. ___, 129 S.Ct. 1862, *4 (2009) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 870 (8th ed. 2004)). The Johnson decision clearly undermines the scope of subject matter jurisdiction, making it no longer a prerequisite to hear a case. By announcing its new rule that Utah courts can grant a divorce even if no marriage existed, the Utah Supreme Court has eliminated the need for subject matter jurisdiction and replaced it with a rule that any court of general jurisdiction has the ability to grant a divorce, even if there was no marriage. Such a decision clearly contravenes this Court's clear direction on subject matter jurisdiction. Therefore, a grant of certiorari is appropriate to curtail this broad decision of the Utah Supreme Court.

III. Respondent Ina Johnson's characterization of Petitioner's alleged behavior is extraneous, inappropriate, and irrelevant to this Petition.

Respondent Ina Johnson repeatedly alleges Petitioner's behavior somehow bears on whether this Court should grant certiorari on this Petition. She repeatedly argues Petitioner has been held in contempt and has failed to make payments ordered under the decree. (See Brief in Opposition of Respondent, pp. 12-13.) Respondent only uses these tactics to distract from the important legal issue in the Petition: Whether the Utah Supreme Court's decision contravenes the DOMA and the U.S. Constitution and violates federal law relating to subject matter jurisdiction when it allows a court to grant a divorce when no legal marriage existed? This question is an important federal question and bears upon a state's right to govern its people when it encompasses federal law. Therefore, these arguments are not relevant, even if they were accurate.

Further, Respondent fails to acknowledge her conduct is by far worse than Petitioner's alleged conduct. Respondent filed for divorce, knowing that the parties were never married. (R. 0004; 1913, ¶ 2; 2097, ¶ 2; see also Johnson, 2010 UT 28.) Respondent was the accountant and handled the books for Petitioner's business, International Automated Systems ("IAS"), and lied about filing taxes for the business. (See currently pending matter, International Automated System, Inc., v. Ina Bodell, Third Judicial District Court of Salt Lake County, State of Utah, Civil No. 090912428.) Respondent further introduced destructive software codes intending to sabotage IAS' software for the U-Check system, and which did destroy the U-Check system. (Id.) Respondent further fails to admit she violated the terms of the decree, by taking more real property than she was awarded under the decree and selling the property before Petitioner realized the error and could receive a court order to stop the sale. (Id.) In effect, Respondent Ina Johnson's conduct began this string of litigation. That, however, is not before this Court. What is at issue is the need to clarify the important question of subject matter jurisdiction as applied by the Utah Supreme Court. Therefore, certiorari is necessary to clarify the scope of the Johnson decision.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, Petitioner, Neldon Johnson, respectfully requests this Court accept his Petition and grant Certiorari to review the issues affecting his rights.

Respectfully Submitted.
